History & Nature

Grayton Beach State Park lies within the Coastal Lowlands region with 13 distinct natural communities—beach dune, mesic flatwoods, sandhill, scrub, scrubby flatwoods, baygall, depression marsh, dome, seepage slope, wet flatwoods, coastal dune lake, estuarine tidal marsh and marine unconsolidated substrate.

Three major coastal dune lakes lie mostly within the park's boundaries—Western Lake, Alligator Lake and Little Redfish Lake. Dune lakes are unusual coastal features found in few other places in the world.

The shoreline at Grayton Beach has been shaped by the wave action, winds and longshore currents of the gulf. The effects of salt spray and wind pruning, two of nature's landscaping tools, are evidenced everywhere. Drifting sand also changes the landscape. What appear to be "bushes" in the dunes are often full-sized slash pines and southern magnolias, with only the tree tops protruding.

Shorebirds are numerous on the beach and sea turtles often nest here during the summer.
The dunes are home to the endangered
Choctawhatchee beach mouse. Foot traffic is prohibited on sand dunes and bird nesting areas.

The park's name comes from the neighboring township of Grayton Beach, one of the oldest townships along the Gulf of Mexico in Walton County. Obtained through a land lease from the Florida Board of Education in 1964, Grayton Beach State Park was dedicated and opened in 1968.
