

History & Nature

In 1893, Hugh Taylor Birch, a Chicago attorney, came to South Florida in search of a secluded area for his home. He settled in a small village called Fort Lauderdale that included a store, a few houses and the remains of the old Ft. Lauderdale Army Post.

Purchasing ocean-front property for about a dollar per acre, he eventually owned a three-and-a-half mile stretch of land along the beach. In 1940, at age 90, he built his Art Deco-style home here. He called his 180-acre estate Terramar or "land to the sea."

Wishing to preserve his subtropical paradise from the development springing up around it, Birch donated his estate for use as a public park. On December 31, 1941, the Florida Board of Forestry and Parks obtained title to the property that became Hugh Taylor Birch State Park. It is now an island of trees and greenery in the middle of urban Fort Lauderdale. The park is located on a barrier island between the Atlantic Ocean and the Intracoastal Waterway.

Today, the park is one of the most unique features in Fort Lauderdale. It is frequently compared to Central Park in New York as both are seen as an island of peaceful green vegetation in the midst of

A short walk from beachside shops and condominiums, Hugh Taylor Birch State Park is an oasis of tropical hammocks and a gift from the late attorney Hugh Taylor Birch. His former estate preserves four distinct natural communities nestled between the Atlantic Ocean and the Intracoastal Waterway.

Visitors can rent a canoe and paddle along a mile-long freshwater lagoon to see turtles and ducks. Small sections of the mangroves provide habitat for herons, wading birds, raccoons, gray squirrels and marsh rabbits. The seawall along the Intracoastal Waterway offers fishing.

Nature lovers can hike two short trails and learn about local plants and wildlife. The park provides safe harbor to gopher tortoise and gray fox.

Bicyclists and skaters glide along the paved park drive.

Visitors can access the beach via the pedestrian tunnel under A1A. Picnic areas overlook the Intracoastal Waterway. Pavilions with water and electricity can be rented for family gatherings. Two playgrounds are available.

Birch's 2-story home, a combination of Spanish and Art Deco architecture serves as the Terramar Visitor Center. It features exhibits of the natural and cultural history of the park and South Florida. Visitors can watch a short video about the park.

Throughout the year, the park is also home to Camp Live Oak, an exciting environmental day camp for children ages 5 to 13.

A group/youth campground for up to 68 people is available to organized groups. It features six cabins, a meeting/dining room and fully equipped kitchen. Reservations are required.

Directions

Hugh Taylor Birch State Park is located on East Sunrise Blvd. in Fort Lauderdale, off A1A.
